Why States Are Stepping Up Attacks on Large Mergers

Seymour D. Lewis

State attorneys general have opened a second line of battle against mergers that they conclude produce anticompetitive effects in their jurisdictions. A 1990 Supreme Court ruling allowing them to seek the breakup of completed deals reinforces their legal weaponry. The states believe the federal government has been too easy on merger enforcement.

41 New Curbs on Deductions of M&A Fees and Expenses

Albert A. Remeikis and Gregory M. Fowler

Historically an unsettled area, the issue of whether m&a costs can be deducted from taxes or should be capitalized has become more complex. A Tax Court ruling has barred deduction of many expenses in friendly transactions, putting others in doubt and potentially adding major sums to the costs of a deal. Meanwhile, the IRS has become more aggressive in challenging deductibility of m&a costs.

45 How Accounting Rules Shook Up LBO Dealmaking

Jerry Gorman

Complex new rules on accounting treatment of LBOs emerged from years of give-and-take in the accounting profession. They promise far-reaching effects on leveraged deal structuring in the way they change postacquisition values and financials. However, the new consensus doesn't please accountants who say deal-by-deal variations in LBOs resist regulation by one set of standards.

At the Top of the Line

There is still another postscript to the $24.7 billion leveraged buyout of RJR Nabisco Inc. that was completed in April 1989. That one megadeal generated some rather unusual results in the statistics that measure the pace of merger and acquisition activity for public companies and its impact on overall market value for publicly traded companies.

For example, acquisitions of public companies declined in 1989, in line with the entire m&a market. Yet, the dollar value of deals in which public companies were the targets rose substantially — exceeding the 1989 gains in the total market values of all issues traded on the New York Stock Exchange and the NASDAQ system and coming close to the run-up on the American Stock Exchange. That resulted strictly from the inclusion of the RJR deal.

However, even with the RJR deal, the impact of public company acquisitions on total values in the three markets remained miniscule, continuing a long-term trend.

Acquirers spent more than $133 billion to buy 228 public companies in 1989. The stock markets, as usual, shrugged off their departures from trading.

A drop in deals

Acquisitions of public companies in 1989 dropped to 228 from 320 in 1988 for a decline of 28.8 percent. But dollar value, thanks to the RJR transaction, climbed 15.9 percent to $133.5 billion from $115.1 billion the year before. The average purchase price for a public company jumped to $585.1 million from $359.7 million — a surge of about 62.7 percent, again largely as a result of the RJR deal.

Between December 31, 1988, and December 31, 1989, by contrast, total market value on the New York Stock Exchange rose by 9.75 percent, on the American Stock Exchange by 17.8 percent, and on NASDAQ by 14.1 percent. The total number of mergers and acquisitions (worth at least $1 million each) in 1989 was 3,412, down 14.7 percent from an upward revised 4,001 in 1988, according to the M&A Data Base, ADP/MLR Publishing. Dollar value was off only 2.4 percent to $230.7 billion from an upward revised $236.4 billion, which represents a record level.

One obvious conclusion from the foregoing data is that acquisitions of publicly owned targets account for a fraction of all transactions but a disproportionate amount — often a majority — of the reported dollar value. That pattern was repeated in 1989. Public companies accounted for only 6.6 percent of all m&a targets, but the aggregate value toted up to 57.8 percent of known dollar value. The hefty share of dollar value was at least partly attributable to RJR Nabisco. But, traditionally, the smallish base of public deals wields a far greater impact on the dollar volume, in part because public targets dominate the highest-priced deals in any year and in part because exact prices are known in practically all public deals while they're often shrouded in secrecy for private deals and divestitures.

The 1989 data further underscore the fact that many more private companies than public concerns are acquired each year. In 1989, there were 1,254 acquisitions of private companies, or more than five times the number of acquired public companies. In 1988, there were 1,722 acquisitions of private companies, again more than five times the number of public company acquisitions. The ratios are consistent with most of the annual public vs. private breakdowns for the late 1980s. (Note: The table on page 15 includes only private company acquisitions for which purchase prices were disclosed.)

All of these data are utilized for a study of m&a activity aimed largely at determining how the removal of public companies from trading affects overall market value of publicly held companies. For both public and private companies, the study focuses only on acquisitions of standalone entities and excludes divestitures and partial acquisitions.

Since there are no truly systematic measurements of the m&a impact on the three key equity markets, the study that M&A conducts annually assumes that the purchase price represents the market value of the target company at the time the deal was completed. This is because in most cases, arbitrage activity tends to drive up the price of the target from prevailing trading levels toward the actual purchase price. Admittedly, that calculation would tend to overstate the market values of target companies because some of their share prices don't respond to the typical arbitrage buying stimulus. However, with that bias, the proportions of total market value retired by acquisitions are quite small.

To measure this impact, the purchase prices of targets that had been traded publicly are compared with total market values of the three key equity markets on the last trading days of both 1988 and 1989.

During 1989, acquisitions were executed for 68 companies listed on the New York Stock Exchange, down from 89 the year before, or a plunge of 23.6 percent. However, total purchase prices for Big Board-listed issues actually rose 34.2 percent to $107.2 billion from $79.9 billion. Credit most of the dollar value gain again to the RJR deal, which also was the principal player in lifting the average purchase per Big Board target to $1.58 billion from $898.2 million.

Therefore, acquisitions of Big Board companies accounted for only 2 percent of all 1989 m&a transactions but close to half — 46.4 percent — of known dollars that changed hands. And while only 29.8 percent of the publicly owned targets were on the NYSE, they accounted for a whopping 80.4 percent of the money shelled out in all public transactions.

So what dent did this activity make in the Big Board's total market value? A barely noticeable one. Total market value for NYSE issues reached $2.7 trillion at the close of 1989 from $2.46 trillion a year earlier. Thus, the $107.2 billion in collective purchase prices was less than 4 percent of the total market value at the end of 1989 and 4.3 percent of the total 12 months before.

RJR obviously did not carry the load on its own. Big Board-listed companies were the targets in eight of the 10 largest deals of 1989, and they took down 21 of the year's 34 deals priced at $1 billion or more.

The American Stock Exchange supplied 34 companies to the slate of m&a targets in 1989 with purchase prices totaling $6.5 billion. The number of targets fell 27.6 percent from the 1988 level of 47 and the collective dollar value was off 16.6 percent from $7.8 billion. However, the average purchase price increased to $190.7 million from $165.3 million. Exxon Corp.'s $4.2 billion acquisition of Texaco Canada Inc. was the largest acquisition of an Amex company and it was principally responsible for the increase in the average purchase price.

Amex-listed targets accounted for a mere one percent of all m&a transactions and only 2.8 percent of the known dollar value in the dealmaking universe. As for public deals, the Amex contributed 14.9 percent of the targets and 4.9 percent of the purchase prices.

Acquisitions apparently cut a bit more deeply into Amex market value than into the Big Board total, even though that exchange had the best overall performance of the three key markets. Total market value jumped to $130.8 billion as of Dec. 29, 1989 — the year's last trading day — from $111 billion at the close of 1988. The $6.5 billion in collective purchase prices was 5 percent of the 1989 year-end market value and 5.9 percent of the 1988 closing level.

In the over-the-counter market, 126 companies were taken out through acquisition, down 31.5 percent from 184 in 1988. The dollar value slipped to $19.8 billion from $27.4 billion, for a decline of 27.7 percent. The average purchase price for an OTC target rose, however, to $157.1 million from $148.6 million. The OTC market supplied 3.7 percent of all 1989 targets and 8.6 percent of the publicly held companies acquired. OTC companies represented 55.3 percent of all acquired public targets but only 14.8 percent of the dollars expended in purchases of public concerns.

Market value recorded by the NASDAQ system was $386.3 billion at the close of 1989, a rise of 14.1 percent from $338.7 billion at the end of 1988. The $19.8 billion in acquisition values represented 5.1 percent of the 1989 year-end market value and 5.8 of the 1988 closing aggregate.

The biggest deal involving an OTC company was the Procter & Gamble Co. acquisition of Noxell Corp. for $1.4 billion in stock. □

Roundtable

How Pacific Rim Buyers Are Hitting the World M&A Scene

A framework for mergers and acquisitions is just starting to take shape in Southeast Asia and other Pacific Rim sectors. Dealmaking within the area is limited by a paucity of companies, and not many outside concerns find the prospects tempting enough to buy into the area. But eight m&a professionals who participated in this Roundtable discussion, which was conducted in Tokyo, report that larger Pacific Rim companies, with global designs and the finances to support them, are gaining prominence as buyers in other parts of the world.

Getting the Hang of M&A

M&A: In general terms, how would you describe the status of mergers and acquisitions in the Pacific Rim area? For purposes of this discussion, we will define the area as Hong Kong, Taiwan, Malaysia, Singapore, Indonesia, the Philippines, Australia, and New Zealand and include Japanese companies as buyers in that area.

Michael Garner: I think that the general status is embryonic. Mergers and acquisitions are relatively rare in most of the Pacific Rim. The main areas of activity would be Australia and New Zealand. Both are relatively wealthy and Anglo-Saxon. They are used to m&a activity and have had it for many years.

In Singapore there is a limited amount of activity. The stock market is relatively small and, of course, it became smaller when Malaysian companies withdrew. There are relatively few m&a transactions, although the country's privatization program could be of some significance.

Hong Kong could be one of the major markets, but obviously the uncertainty of the 1997 turnover to mainland China makes it a relatively unattractive target area. But there is a trend by controlling shareholders to take publicly traded companies private.

Theodore Lowen: Merger and acquisition activity is just beginning in Taiwan. There are companies with surpluses of cash that are looking to internationalize and to go forward with privatizations and listings on the stock exchange. Some very interesting activities will be going on with Taiwanese companies in the next few years.

Indonesia is not quite at that level of development, but companies there are now learning how to become public and, therefore, are starting to get very interested in doing sophisticated financial transactions. Some interesting alliances and m&a activity could be coming out of Jakarta as well.

Some very interesting activities will be going on with Taiwanese companies in the next few years.

Theodore Lowen
Hill & Knowlton

Yoichi Kuze: I attended a meeting of countries from the eastern region of Singapore last year and each was presented with a similar question on m&a activity. Except for Japan, they are still trying to become industrialized countries. So the majority want to do business from scratch.

As for Japan, we are still helping Japanese companies acquire in the U.S. But now they tend to look at Europe. There is a huge potential for Japanese companies to acquire in Europe. They are very eager to acquire or to participate in a venture with a European partner. But the problem is that the companies for sale are very small in terms of numbers and few meet the criteria of Japanese buyers.

Now, the small or mid-sized Japanese company is starting to realize it has to set up some plant or marketing facilities in the U.S. In the past, only the bigger Japanese companies were very active in acquiring in the U.S., but now the profile of the Japanese acquirer includes small and medium-sized companies.

When Japanese companies look at the other Asian countries, such as Singapore, Hong Kong, Taiwan, and Malaysia, they try to put their manufacturing into those countries to gain productivity and improve their cost-performance ratios, due to the yen appreciation against the U.S. dollar and in other currencies. To that extent, Japanese concerns are interested in buying or making alliances with local partners. Japan's labor cost is higher than in other countries in the East. So one of the most important reasons they want to diversify their investments is to shift manufacturing from Japan to other Asian countries.

Richard E. Foyston: I think there are four conditions required for the development of an effective cross-border m&a market. On the buy side, two key conditions are capital and cross-border ambition and vision. On the availability side there must be companies available for sale at reasonable prices. The fourth condition is infrastructure, i.e., adequate capital markets and service providers. All are required to actively do business.

On the inbound side, several of these elements are missing in Asia, and that's why the inbound side has been so slow to develop compared with the outbound. Outbound — Asia to the rest of the world — has had all those conditions present for the last couple of years, except for cross-border ambition and vision. Now that is in place and that's where the market has taken off.

How big will it get? It will certainly grow, but the number of companies that have the capital and the ambition in most of these countries, with the exception of Japan, is not that great. The really interesting question for the development of the market will be the inbound side, as well as the inside — Asia to Asia.

As for inbound acquisitions, one key issue is the vision of foreign companies to really play an important role in Asian business. The other issue is acceptable value. The price of Asian assets is very high relative to American assets, and it almost always will dilute earnings of a public company. That is likely to continue.

So m&a certainly is in its embryonic stages, except in the area of outbound acquisitions where it's becoming fairly developed and will develop further. But there's a limit to it, and I'm not sure when or if the conditions will really be present for a strong inbound cross-border acquisition market.

Regional Trade-Offs

J. Buckner Brown: In describing overall m&a activity in the Pacific Rim, it's important to distinguish between Australia and the rest of the Pacific Rim, particularly the newly industrialized countries. Historically, Australia has been, by far, the most active acquirer on a dollar value basis. However, due to the financial difficulties that many Australian companies are facing, we do not expect to see as many significant cross-border acquisitions by Australian companies in the near term.

It is a very different situation in other Pacific Rim countries, particularly Hong Kong, Taiwan, and South Korea. The m&a market in these newly industrialized countries is growing significantly, both with respect to the number and size of transactions. However, the total value of m&a transactions in the Pacific Rim region is still very small in a global context.

John E. Perry, Jr.: Japanese investment in Southeast Asia tends to revolve around the interests of the Japanese economy and, thus, is viewed with suspicion by many governments, which have erected barriers to protect domestic industry. For example, Japanese investment today is focused on tourism and low value-added manufacturing for export to Japan. Such investments do not become a permanent part of the domestic market and are easily withdrawn.

There is a lingering degree of distrust on both sides, which so far has limited the opportunities for m&a. But as the economies of the Pacific Rim emerge, Japan's need for growth opportunities will harmonize with the underdeveloped nations' need for technology, and the barriers to m&a will slowly diminish. I would not expect to see a large market develop anytime soon, however.

Yuji Yamamoto: From the Japanese perception, the key attraction in Southeast Asia is a way to gain cheaper labor costs. So Japanese companies have set up manufacturing in countries such as Thailand, and more Japanese companies want to move into these areas to establish manufacturing operations. They often have to do it as a joint venture, because in some countries there are certain restrictions on foreign investment. The foreign shareholder can own only a 50-percent interest in some cases. As for Australia, I think Japanese investment is going to be mostly in real estate.

The price of Asian assets in very high, and it almost always will dilute the earnings of a public company.

Richard E. Foyston
Boston Consulting Group

Inbound m&a activity in Japan may continue to be slow. I think foreign investors are discouraged from acquiring Japanese companies by three main things, including high stock prices and cross-shareholdings. The third is the very unique Japanese-style management, which may be difficult for the foreign management to understand.

John E. Hannaz: The ambition to compete on a worldwide basis is one of the key characteristics that is developing throughout the Pacific region. We have seen within the last couple of years a fairly substantial increase in acquisitions by Pacific Rim companies in the U.S. and Europe. They also are acquiring extensively, particularly assets, in Asia. The Japanese strategy of using the Pacific Rim as a manufacturing base is one of the things that drives places like the newly industrialized economies outside of Hong Kong, particularly the countries that have lower cost structures.

One of the difficulties in the near term is that the stock markets are so thin that there is really not a lot to buy. You almost have to begin with an asset acquisition strategy or you have to create new businesses. Outside of Australia, the challenge will be to find businesses that can be acquired. I think you also will see Europeans and Americans divesting some assets in the Far East, and that will provide a little extra input for m&a activity.

Loosening the Family Hold

M&A: Are there any countries or areas in the Pacific Rim where a domestic merger and acquisition market is developing relative to companies acquiring other businesses within the same country?

Garner: Perhaps the most important point here is that a domestic m&a market is developing in Japan. It's not on the stock market or in buying an interest in listed companies. It involves buying privately owned, family companies that previously weren't available for sale.

A few years ago, the family-owned company would not leave the family. Now the Japanese are starting to become willing to sell to other Japanese. They're less willing, in fact I would say unwilling, to sell to non-Japanese, at least as of yet.

Lowen: From a Southeast Asian perspective, I see the family-rooted company remaining very strong, even among the major companies of Hong Kong. There's still one dominant individual or family that runs the company. In Australia and New Zealand, the company often is dominated by one dynamic individual who has cleverly structured the setup so the firm is not up for acquisition. But the domestic market in Japan is clearly the most dynamic one and the most interesting one for Japanese companies looking to acquire each other.

When the Japanese acquire, they generally use a Japanese bank, whether it's the New York branch or the London branch.

Kuze: I think that because of the global complexion of business, the Japanese are accepting m&a as a way of expanding or collaborating with another company by way of acquisition. Until very, very recently, to be honest, the Japanese had been hesitant to acquire somebody else's business. There is still hesitation at home because of the Japanese way of management.The concept of lifetime employment is being reduced, but it still covers most of our employment. We can't change our jobs as frequently as people do in America and Europe. That means that shareholders and management have a kind of mental and psychological responsibility to keep the company and go ahead.

But I think, in terms of numbers, that Japanese companies are not feeling guilty about selling their businesses, provided that the acquiring company is competent enough to build or maintain the business in a good way. There are some very small companies that are family-owned. If the family is going to die or going to retire from an industry or a succession in the family can't be found, the choice could be to sell the business.

Over past few years, the Japanese have been buying foreign companies, particularly in the U.S., in a way that is very, very acceptable to Japanese industry. But we don't believe that any Japanese company listed on the Tokyo Stock Exchange can be for sale. Even if foreign companies submit a good deal and a high price, they will not sell.

Our people in Hong Kong certainly see Hong Kong as having an internal m&a market. Others clearly are Australia and, to a lesser extent, Singapore.

M&A: What outside countries do you see as major acquirers in the Pacific Rim?

Foyston: Which worldwide companies will be interested in those particular markets? Western companies have the most to gain from acquisition in Asia. But Western companies tend not to think about buying in markets where acquisition is not rampant. Very few have the vision to pursue strategic acquisitions in Asia.

I think it's important to remember that there are really only two good reasons to acquire a company. One is to conduct some sort of financial or restructuring exercise. The other is to get something that you want to have when the easiest, cheapest, or fastest way to get it is to buy it. The m&a market worldwide would be much smaller than it is now had it not been for the opportunities in Anglo-Saxon countries to restructure, to relever-age, and to conduct a number of different kinds of financial exercises.

Those exercises have been the bulk of the Australian m&a market. In Hong Kong, the acquisition market largely has been in shell companies and land. Those restructuring and financial opportunities aren't available in most of the Asian countries, so that eliminates a very large portion of what we have seen in the U.S. and, to a large extent, more recently, in Europe.

What is left fits in the category of something a company wants to have: an asset of strategic benefit, and it's easier or cheaper to buy instead of build. Those opportunities are there if you want them. They have been around now for 10 or 20 years and have been largely ignored by the countries that have the capital, such as the European countries and the U.S.

I would expect that there will be a small number of active acquirers from the West and an even smaller number from Japan, because they don't need to acquire to get what they want. The Japanese are better off building, for various reasons. But it's a small number of Western companies that have the vision and that are prepared to put capital into markets in which assets are very expensive.

Buying Vs. Building

M&A: Are you suggesting that in Asia, the strategic advantage rests with building instead of buying?

Foyston: Remember that, traditionally, the strategic buy-side advantage is either speed or avoiding an increase in industry capacity. One important element of acquisitions in traditional industries, such as chemicals and tires, is not to add capacity. We will see more of that in autos. Building significant new positions in some of the industries that aren't growing worldwide is almost impossible without acquiring existing assets to get them off the market.

Inside Asia, the opportunities are not of that sort. The acquisition opportunities are typically in businesses that are growing, either because they haven't existed at a national level before or they are sectors of the economy that have not been particularly important until recently, with the growth of the service sector, the middle class, and so on. So, while I think the merits of a buy-assets strategy are important in economic circumstances of reasonably low-growth and strong competition, those aren't big issues in the local Asian markets.

Kuze: A company should have a certain attraction to the buyer, such as technologies or market channels or market share. But I can't see any such attractions in Southeast Asia. So that discourages Japanese companies from buying companies in Southeast Asia.

Perry: There also are cultural barriers between Japan and Southeast Asian countries that make it very difficult for a Japanese company to make equity investments. One important limiting factor is that there is no way for the Japanese investor to hedge the risk that the local staff will accept Japanese management practice.

Today there is no easy exit route if things don't work. There's also a political factor that varies from country to country that is still very strong. These factors, of course, influence any buyer, whether it be American or European, but in the case of Japan, there also are historical reasons.

Despite that, the Japanese would be the leading players in any developing international m&a market in Southeast Asia, because of proximity and the availability of capital. But we don't see very much of m&a yet. When they do invest, they prefer to make a greenfield investment or to form a joint venture with a local partner that they know well.

Garner: I agree. But I think there are going to be exceptions, such as the acquisition of Cerebos Pacific by Suntory. That acquisition would appear to go against everything that's been said. It's a Japanese company acquiring a publicly quoted company in Singapore that has major subsidiaries throughout the Pacific Rim.

I think this deal probably is going to be one of a few exceptions that will prove the rule. But at least as far as Japanese acquirers are concerned, U.S. and European companies have been buying holding companies in Hong Kong and Singapore that have interests throughout the region.

Companies in the Pacific Rim will make significant acquisitions in the U.S. and Europe.

J. Buckner Brown
Shearson Lehman Hutton

M&A: From the descriptions we have heard here, why should any company be interested in the Pacific Rim and why are your organizations building practices there?

An understanding of the need to pay a reasonable fee is a litmus test of an investor's degree of interest.

John E. Perry Jr.
Banque Indosuez

Brown: The Pacific Rim has been and will become increasingly important because companies in this region will make significant acquisitions in the U.S. and Europe. Thus, it is the foreign investment activities of these companies that make the Pacific region important in the m&a market. M&a activity also exists on a domestic basis within the Pacific Rim. However, the dollar value of such transactions is very small relative to the total amount for cross-border acquisitions into the U.S. and, increasingly, Europe.

Hannaz: In some parts of Southeast Asia, certainly in Thailand and perhaps Malaysia, much more European interest is beginning to appear. And, of course, Japanese interest is very substantial. Firms like Minebea and others have put huge sums of money into Thailand.

One of the things that probably will occur over time is that there will be enough of an infrastructure, which is one of the challenges that a lot of these countries are coming up against, to actually support some of the businesses. That will then lead to either consolidations or acquisitions. Restructuring of assets which, of course, always has been the basis for m&a worldwide in Anglo-Saxon countries, is becoming a little bit more apparent in the Pacific Rim.

You're starting to see a few companies making the effort to consolidate. You're starting to see a few holding companies that actually have interests throughout the Pacific Rim. Those companies are very acquirable, because they tend to be incorporated, sometimes even outside the Pacific Rim, in a location where they actually can be purchased, as opposed to in Japan, where acquisition is very difficult.

M&A: Is there enough business to attract your organizations and to build an m&a infrastructure in the Pacific Rim?

Brown: There is definitely enough m&a business in the Pacific Rim for a major securities firm like Shearson Lehman to build an infrastructure and presence in several key markets, particularly in Hong Kong, Taiwan, and South Korea. As I said a minute ago, most of the activity is outgoing m&a, but it is necessary for us to have an office in the local markets to service our Asian clients looking for foreign investment opportunities. It is also often important to our U.S. and European clients that we have a presence in these areas so we can market their corporate divestitures on a global basis.

Foyston: Is there enough outgoing m&a to justify all the infrastructure that Western companies or foreign companies are putting into Asia? Quite possibly not. It's very easy for companies that are involved in m&a in other parts of the world to put some capability into Asia and to say, "Well, when the time comes, we're there." However, there is excess m&a infrastructure capability almost everywhere. But that probably doesn't worry anybody except those who really don't think they can compete.

The number of existing potential acquirers is small. You could sit down and write a list on a piece of paper, visit them all in a space of a few months, and say you had made a contact. What will create the growth, if it is to come, is the number of additional companies that are interested but have not yet made an acquisition.

Remember that the amount of capital in Asia, even if you exclude Japan, is still growing very, very rapidly as a portion of the world's supply of investable capital, and much of it is going to go offshore, into Europe, or into the U.S. Another factor is that about half of the deals, even cross-border deals, in Asia have not involved the traditional players, such as investment bankers.

M&A: We have heard that some companies in this part of the world are not familiar with the custom of paying fees for services. Is that inaccurate?

Perry: It's very accurate, especially regarding retainers. However, our policy is that an understanding of the need to pay a reasonable fee is a litmus test of an investor's degree of interest.

M&A: So what kind of infrastructure can be developed in that type of environment?

Equilibrium is Elusive

Lowen: The roots of our offices out here were started for providing services in the opposite direction. That was when multinational companies from America and Europe were moving into Asia as the new frontier, 20 or 30 years ago. We found a definite need to be here to provide service on a local basis.

Now it's gone full turn in the opposite direction. We find home-grown local businesses in Asia going into the large, ripe, mature markets, notably Europe and America.

M&A: Has anything concrete developed yet on pricing and valuing businesses? Have any rules of thumb emerged?

We don't believe that any Japanese company listed on the Tokyo Stock Exhange can be for sale.

Yoichi Kuze
KPMG Peat Marwick

Foyston: Our experience has been that in outbound acquisitions by Japanese and other Asian companies, acquirers have not made adequate use of valuation criteria. The acquisitions, in fact, are not being made because the price seems to be a little bit less than the value that is in some way calculated. It is very much an emotional thing. It's a question of long-term belief and vision for a company, and whether an acquisition abroad fits into and builds toward that vision.

That has been equally true for Asian companies investing abroad. They have made dramatic leaps in wanting to be international companies and thinking that a particular acquisition would help achieve that. The process for Asian companies has been that there are a certain number of deals available worldwide, that they are shopped around to a small number of potential buyers, and that somebody jumps for the bait.

That's a very risky way to engage in m&a. Companies that are thinking of doing m&a for strategic reasons should, of course, have some means of thinking where they want to go and how an acquisition might or might not fit in that framework. That has not been the case in the past. But since most of the acquisitions that Asians have made have not been highly leveraged, there haven't been the spectacular disasters that we have seen from poorly conceived acquisitions elsewhere.

But I would argue that the process that Asian companies, excluding Japanese companies, have gone through is very naive with regard to overseas m&a. Japanese companies have demonstrated an advanced way of thinking, but it is not based at all on financial calculations. There is nothing that is particularly different about how most Asian or Pacific Rim companies would do those calculations. The point is that often their focus is not as much on the price that they're paying as it is on the feeling and intuition.

Are there rules of thumb from a valuation perspective that are somehow unique to the Pacific Rim? I don't think there are.

M&A: We have heard that Asian companies simply do not like to pay what they consider high prices or, looking at it another way, like to pay low prices. What is your perspective on the prices they are willing to pay in cross-border acquisitions?

Brown: I think it is misleading to make general statements about the propensity of companies from certain countries or regions to either underpay or overpay for acquisitions. However, the reputation that many Asian companies, particularly Japanese companies, have had in the past is overpaying for acquisitions because of easier access to capital or other factors. I think this reputation is generally undeserved. However, there have been certain acquisitions in the U.S. or Europe in which Asian companies have been able to justify a higher acquisition price than have their U.S. or European competitors, due to the higher perceived strategic value of the acquired company to the Asian buyer.

Foreign investors are discouraged from acquiring in Japan by high stock prices, cross-shareholdings, and management style.

Yuji Yamamoto
Arthur Andersen & Co.

Hannsz: One of the things that we have seen many times in working on behalf of Japanese clients, as well as some from Hong Kong and Australia, is that they really do use the same tools that everyone else uses. I think they are somewhat more situational in that they will look at a situation from a competitive point of view to a greater extent than, say, an American company or a U.K. company. They occasionally may ask what it takes to win.

But I don't think that their valuation techniques differ, nor in many cases do they feel that they can reach as much as they probably could, just based on their cost of capital. In many cases, they won't use the lower discount rate that they could really justify, based on where they're coming from. I think that's often a mistake, because it's one of their competitive strengths.

Kuze: The Japanese pay attention to the U.S. style of acquisitions by asking the same kinds of questions. But, based on my experience, if the chairman or president of a Japanese company is committed to buy, the price is a secondary concern. As long as they can procure the money from the banks or by issuing the stock, I think money is still secondary.

M&A: What type of financing network do the Pacific Rim buyers utilize to finance outbound acquisitions?

Brown: Acquisition financing in the Pacific Rim has been and will continue to be bank financing. Equity markets play little or no direct role in acquisition financing, due to government regulations and other factors, and these markets are not sufficiently developed to provide mezzanine or other sources of financing.

Leveraging Blue-Chip Ratings

M&A: Is that bank debt in the home country, bank debt in the country of the target company, bank debt in a third country, or some combination?

Garner: When the Japanese acquire, they generally use a Japanese bank, whether it's the New York branch or the London branch, or wherever.

Perry: Major Japanese companies in recent years have been able to substantially reduce the amount of bank debt that they carry, thus putting pressure on their relationship with their main bankers who operate under a tacit agreement that in return for holding the company's shares and thereby protecting them from raiders, the bank will receive substantial banking business. Japanese acquirers feel indebted to their main banks and are not in a position to look elsewhere for financing, even though they might be able to save money by doing so.

Hannsz: There's a growing sophistication about foreign exchange risk. One of the reasons people are starting to finance more in the home country of the target is that they, in part, want to match assets against liabilities. In Japan there are huge cash reserves, and financing is really not an effort. Many companies enjoy a triple-A credit and can borrow at an extremely low rate.

It's unlikely that you'll have that level of creditworthiness anywhere else in the region. In those countries, acquirers tend to use other sources and

A near-term difficulty is that Pacific Rim stock markets are so thin that there is really not a lot to buy.

John E. Hannsz

to finance in a way that is more closely related to the assets being acquired.

Foyston: If you look at what is underlying this continual stream of capital that's bubbling up in Asia and being spread across the world, it is combined very high growth and saving rates. The economies of virtually every single country generate large trade surpluses and they have built up tremendous foreign exchange reserves.

There is a secondary effect that is today, of course, quite elementary, but tomorrow it may not be. That is the ability to really leverage up the value of capital in capital markets that, by worldwide standards, have placed extremely high values on future earnings. This can be done in the form of issuing convertible bonds in Europe at very low rates to raise capital that works out to be 50 times earnings or more. You can buy a company in the U.S. at 15 times earnings. That would seem to be a game that at some point would have to come to an end.

M&A: How do your head offices view your prospects in Japan? Do they see it as a large market but one in which the high overhead costs may not justify the benefits?

Lowen: In Asia, you're called upon to redefine your business. Are there a number of companies that come over to go after a small piece of business? I don't think that's going to be true. I think there will be plenty of business and transactions going on but they will be of a smaller size and maybe with a very tight strategic focus.

Perhaps that would change the way we structure our offices and the way we look to make profits. But the business activity still will go on. It's a ripe market. It's just a way of redefining the Asian version or the Pacific Rim version of merger and acquisition activity.

Perry: In Japan, a European investment bank can fill an important niche through its ability to guide Japanese investors to countries where the language and business customs are poorly understood by the Japanese investor and their main banks. Our service to the Japanese buyer includes the added benefit in that we can establish a good working relationship with the seller, whose cooperation even after the closing is generally required to make the deal work. We are confident that the volume of Japanese investment toward Europe justifies the high overhead costs of having a team of professionals in Tokyo today. Domestic Japanese m&a and inward-bound deals are for the time being much less important to our overall strategy. ■

Cross-Border Acquisitions

The Lure of U.S. Retailing To the Foreign Acquirer

Madhav Kacker

Campeau Corp.'s ill-fated invasion of American retailing was atypical of foreign investment in U.S. merchandising. Most overseas investors are in the game for strategic reasons and have little use for great leverage or real estate kickers. Some have misfired but the scorecard of foreign acquisitions includes such hits as the rescue of A&P, the relentless expansion of Food Lion, and the renaissance of Spiegel.

WELL BEFORE CAMPEAU CORP. met disaster in trying to assemble a vast U.S. department store network, there had been serious questions about how overseas companies have fared in their acquisitions of American retailers. Although a number of deals have ended in failure, a study of major retail acquisitions by foreign buyers over the last two decades suggests that, in general, the results have been good.

Success stories include cases in which the target company has either been rescued from collapse or expanded dramatically under foreign ownership. Conversely, the failures centered on instances in which the target company was too far gone to save or suffered from heavy-handed management by the overseas owner.

The study focused on 20 major foreign acquisitions that were analyzed at both the macro and micro levels. Eleven will be discussed in detail later in this article. They include a mixture of strategies, managerial techniques, and target company types that are suggestive of the diversity of foreign investments in American retailing.

Indeed, the survey found that changes at the target companies ranged from moderate to substantial. In eight of the 20 cases, the new owners took major steps to revitalize their businesses. That included revamping top management, redefining organizational goals and objectives, reformulating strategies, repositioning store images, and promoting growth plans. In 10 cases, the management was left in place to pursue fresh approaches and strategies toward promotion of growth, cost-cutting programs, and improved operating efficiencies.

One significant finding was that the acquisition program by Canadian-based Campeau, which foundered with the bankruptcy of its American retailing businesses in late 1989, was hardly prototypical of foreign investments in U.S. retailing. For one thing, Campeau's undoing was the heavy leverage it used in buying Allied Stores Corp. for $3.6 billion in 1986 and Federated Department

Madhav Kacker, Ph.D., is Associate Professor of marketing at Suffolk University, Boston.

Stores Inc. for $6.6 billion in 1988. Few other foreign buyers made such risky use of debt in their American retailing purchases, the study found. Nor did most foreign buyers find it necessary to execute the extensive postacquisition asset disposition program that Campeau undertook. In 1988 and 1989 alone, sell-offs included Filene's, Foley's, I. Magnin, Bullock's, Gold Circle, Main Street, and Children's Place, out of Federated, and Brooks Brothers, out of Allied. Finally, other foreign buyers were not particularly interested in buying U.S. retailers as a real estate play, which was a primary strategy of Campeau.

But even before the debt load caught up with Campeau, a chaotic transition — especially after the Federated transaction — was causing operational problems. Major cost-cutting programs were initiated, resulting in layoffs of hundreds of employees at all levels. The exit of many top managers touched off a leadership crisis at several divisions. Morale was poor throughout the organization.

There was no other case in the study, even when risk was acknowledged from the start or failure directly resulted from the acquirer's mistakes, in which a foreign acquisition was launched on such shaky premises.

Acquisitions of food retailers

Tengelmann Group – A&P

Tengelmann Group of West Germany acquired the majority interest in the Great Atlantic & Pacific Tea Co. supermarket chain in 1979. The long-troubled A&P had once consisted of an unwieldy network of more than 3,000 stores, supported by several food processing operations, but by the time of the acquisition it was down to 1,800 stores.

The new owner found serious drawbacks in A&P's manufacturing and marketing operations. It began to close more than 200 stores and sell off some of the manufacturing plants that had become uneconomical. A survival plan drawn up by a leading management consultant under the former management was abandoned in favor of more drastic surgery, a vigorous cost-reduction drive, and a meticulously designed growth program.

As a result, a large food manufacturing plant and a detergent plant were closed and the network of stores was scaled down further. By 1982, there were 1,020 stores in 26 eastern and southern states.

Utilizing its experience in discount retailing, the German parent tried to convert some units into German-model box stores with merchandise displayed in cardboard boxes and prices posted on signs rather than stamped on each item. Although the box stores entailed low overhead and could break even on sales within a store size of 12,000 square feet, the experiment did not succeed and resulted in a loss of $75 million over a two-year period. The company halted the expansion of no-frills discount stores to concentrate on a program of store modernization, upscaling of stores, and acquisitions.

The efforts began to bear fruit when A&P showed its first postacquisition profits in 1982. It has been acquiring extensively since 1983 when it bought the Kohl chain in Wisconsin from Batus Inc., purchased 14 Eagle supermarkets in the Midwest from Lucky Stores Inc., and acquired 20 Virginia supermarkets from Pantry Pride Inc. In 1986, A&P acquired the Waldbaum and Shopwell/Food Emporium chains to expand its operations in the New York area. The Borman's Inc. chain in the Detroit area was added in a 1989 acquisition.

In the fiscal year ended February 24, 1990, A&P earned $146.7 million, or $3.84 a share, on sales of $11.1 billion.

Promodes SA – Red Food Stores Inc.

Red Food Stores Inc., a grocery chain operating mainly in Tennessee and northern Georgia, was acquired in January 1980 by Promodes SA, one of the major retailing groups in France. The French retailer's decision to move to the U.S. was part of its strategic program of internationalizing operations. The parent company adopted a policy of minimal interference in the U.S. operation, leaving the entire decisionmaking process in the hands of local management, specifically a small policymaking group of company executives.

The acquisition was followed by the appointment of a new chief executive. His long experience at a similar type of grocery chain in the South smoothed the process of transition. During the 1980s, the chain grew steadily, attained higher productivity, and showed improved financial performance. The new management initiated action in several directions, including renovation and expansion of existing stores, addition of new stores, introduction of computerized inventory buying, modernization of the storage and warehousing system, and establishment of a marketing information system. In 1989, Red Food Stores acquired seven supermarkets in the Chattanooga, Tenn., area from Kroger Co. to become the biggest food retailer, with a total of 50 stores, in its operating region.

Ahold – Bi-Lo Inc.

Ahold NV, a Dutch retailing group, acquired Bi-Lo Inc. in August 1977. At the time of the acquisition, Bi-Lo operated about 160 stores, mainly in North and South Carolina and Georgia. Important changes in the U.S. company followed. Its distribution center went through a major renovation, with technical assistance from the parent. Other areas given priority by the new management were personnel development, marketing research, and information systems. The management set up a well-equipped training facility within the corporate office, and experts were hired to create a new visual image for the chain. From 1986 through 1988, Bi-Lo launched a strategic initiative which involved remodeling of its stores to make a greater commitment to specialty departments.

Ahold's U.S. operations were later expanded to include Giant Food Stores Inc. and First National Supermarkets with combined sales of $3.5 billion and 336 stores in 1988. Bi-Lo itself had sales of $56.3 million that year.

Général Occidentale – Grand Union

Grand Union Co., a large East Coast chain of supermarkets based in New Jersey, was acquired in 1983 by Général Occidentale, a British-French company controlled by Sir James Goldsmith. The new management adopted a three-pronged approach to streamline the operations: close unprofitable stores, change the merchandise mix, and tighten financial reporting. It also decided to concentrate on selected market areas, launch a major store conversion and renovation program, and convert its core operations from conventional supermarkets to full-service food markets called food centers. The number of stores was reduced from 856 at the end of 1980 to 610 by April 1983.

The company converted some of its high volume and profitable stores into food markets in the 40,000 to 50,000 square foot range. It experimented with several new departments, featuring an assortment of domestic and foreign candies, high-quality cookies, and some 200 varieties of natural foods displayed in bulk. In 1982, the company invested a record $116 million as part of its six-year capital development program.

The initial part of the reorganization was accomplished without interruption of increased results — with sales rising to $4.1 billion in 1982 from $1.4 billion in 1973. But a second stage of redevelopment begun in the early 1980s both trimmed sales and put the chain in the red until 1985. Results have improved since then. In 1988, Grand Union was sold in a $655 million management buyout. It was sold again the following year for $1.2 billion to GND Holdings Corp., a group consisting of the investment banking firms of Salomon Inc. and Miller Tabak Hirsch & Co. and the company management. Miller Tabak Hirsch also controls the P&C Food Markets Inc. and Penn Traffic Co. supermarket chains in the East.

Delhaize Le Lion – Food Town Stores

Food Town Stores, another grocery chain operating in Virginia and the Carolinas, was acquired in 1975 by Delhaize "Le Lion" SA, the second largest Belgian retailing company at that time. The new owner launched an expansion program to gain a wider market coverage. The number of stores went through a steady increase from 45 in 1976 to 567 in 1988, and plans are to expand the chain to 700 in 1991. Support facilities, including construction of a new warehouse in 1983, also were enhanced. Sales grew from $173.1 million to $3.8 billion in 1988. The company is now known as Food Lion Inc.

Acquisitions of department and specialty stores

B.A.T. Industries PLC

B.A.T. Industries PLC was one of the few non-retail companies active in U.S. retail acquisitions that was part of the study. Its strategy was markedly different from the others. The company was looking for investments so it could survive an expected downturn in its core tobacco business and chose retailing as one outlet. The U.S. phase of the program started with the acquisition of the Kohl stores in Wisconsin, which, as previously noted, later was sold to A&P, and followed with the acquisitions of the Gimbels and Saks Fifth Avenue chains in 1973 and Marshall Field & Co. in 1983.

On a deal-by-deal basis, the results were spotty. But whether the overall program was a success or failure became axiomatic in 1989 when B.A.T., responding to a hostile bid by Sir James Goldsmith, decided on a restructuring program that included the sale of its remaining U.S. retail businesses — Saks Fifth Avenue and Marshall Field. In April 1990, Dayton Hudson Corp. agreed to buy Marshall Field for $1.04 billion while an Arabian investor group, Investcorp, agreed to buy Saks for $1.5 billion.

Gimbels was a blot on the acquisition record. After years of trying to turn the chain around, B.A.T. finally got rid of it by closing many stores and selling others in the late 1980s.

However, Saks and Marshall enjoyed large influxes of capital investment and produced very respectable performances. Saks was targeted for significant investment early on. In 1979, a $200 million expansion program was launched and it included the opening of two stores a year and a marketing program aimed at younger, upscale customers. In 1987, another multimillion-dollar expansion and renovation program was launched for both Saks and Marshall Field. By 1988, total sales of the retail division of Batus Inc., the American subsidiary of B.A.T., totaled $2.64 billion.

Vroom en Dreesmann – Dillard Department Stores

Dillard Department Stores Inc. has enjoyed a phenomenal growth trend, paced by extensive and often opportunistic acquisitions, since coming under the control of Vroom en Dreesmann BV of the Netherlands. Vroom en Dreesmann started buying into Dillard in 1979 and now owns a 52-percent interest. Dillard was a managerially and financially strong organization and was considered a sound investment by the Dutch company, which granted nearly complete autonomy to the American management.

Dillard has grown from about 50 stores at the start of the 1980s to more than 160 at the close of 1989. Acquisitions included the Stix Baer & Fuller division of Associated Dry Goods Co. and the John A. Brown and Diamond divisions of Dayton Hudson Co. in 1984, 12 Kansas City area stores from R.H. Macy & Co. in 1986, the Joske's and Cain-Sloan divisions of Allied Stores Corp. in 1987, and D.H. Holmes Co. Ltd. in 1989. Higbee Co. was purchased in a joint venture with Edward J. DeBartolo Corp. in 1988.

The company, which had sales of $391 million in 1980, rang up sales of $3.1 billion in fiscal year ended Jan. 31, 1990, when earnings were $148.1 billion, or $4.36 a share. However, Dillard has been trying to buy out the interest of Vroom en Dreesmann, which has run into operating and financial problems.

Franz Carl Weber – F.A.O. Schwarz

An unsuccessful case involved the effort of the Swiss retailing group, Franz Carl Weber, to turn around the famous but troubled specialty toy chain, F.A.O. Schwarz. Weber bought the company from W.R. Grace & Co. in 1973 and found that the chain lacked the managerial attention and financial support it needed to survive. However, the Swiss believed they could revitalize Schwarz and expand it into markets where it had no stores. The new owner revamped the organizational structure, introduced modern office systems, and built the management team.

By 1982, Schwarz had 32 stores, but Weber found 10 of them to be uneconomical and closed them. In spite of all that was done, sales and earnings did not pick up. In addition to internal problems, such as consistently inadequate inventories, Schwarz suffered from the trend toward discount toy retailing. Weber finally gave up in 1985 when it sold Schwarz to Christiana Cos. Inc., a California real estate developer. Christiana held the chain only briefly and sold it in 1986 to a company headed by Schwarz's CEO, Peter L. Harris, and Peter C. Morse, a Philadelphia investment banker.

Agache-Willot – Korvettes

Korvettes, once a premier discount store chain and a pioneer of hard-goods discounting in the U.S., was acquired by Agache-Willot, a diversified French group, in 1979. Korvettes already was crippled by financial problems and had changed hands twice, in 1966 and 1977, before it was bought by the French company. The new owner apparently was not experienced in operating a retail business in the highly competitive U.S. environment. Agache assumed it would enjoy the protected business opportunity it was used to in France.

But Agache executed a series of changes in strategy, organization, and personnel in a bid to turn around the trouble-stricken organization. It tried to reposition the stores by concentrating on the high-fashion apparel market and upgrading the store facilities. The plans, however, did not materialize. Among other problems, the French owner failed to network with local financial institutions, suppliers, and employees.

The Korvettes financial picture continued to remain bleak. In 1978, preceding the takeover, it suffered a loss of $110.9 million on estimated sales of $600 million. There was a temporary improvement in 1979, but conditions deteriorated in 1980 when sales plunged to $330 million. Two years later, the chain was closed.

Hugo Mann – Fed-Mart

Imposition of European-style merchandising on an unreceptive U.S. market was the principal cause of the failed acquisition of Fed-Mart Corp. by the German retailer, Hugo Mann. Mann acquired control of Fed-Mart, a lackluster discount chain in the West, in the late 1970s and, based on its experience with hypermarkets in Germany, the buyer moved to convert several stores into those giant outlets offering food and general merchandise under one roof. More than $90 million was committed to the conversions but the concept was hard to sell to Americans. By 1979, sales were around $1 billion but Fed-Mart had a loss of $11.1 million. After the losses continued, Fed-Mart was liquidated in 1981.

Otto Versand – Spiegel Inc.

In 1982, Otto Versand, a German mail order company, acquired Spiegel Inc., one of the leading mail order companies in the U.S., from Beneficial Corp. The German company had been looking for a suitable acquisition in the U.S. for years and had considered several companies before finally deciding on Spiegel. The new management planned for limited changes, respecting the cross-cultural disparities in the marketing system they found in the U.S. However, the parent company believed that more similarities between the European and American tastes would develop in the future, leading to more uniform worldwide styling and greater opportunities for growth. Versand concentrated on building Spiegel's customer base and made some hard decisions to streamline the operations. It dropped the low-profit-margin merchandise, such as lawn mowers, chain saws, and most cameras, and shifted concentration to fashion apparel.

Versand took Spiegel public in 1987. Sales, which were at the $42.3 million level in 1981, reached $1.7 billion in 1989 when net income was $73.3 million, or $1.41 a share.

Strategic commitments

From this brief discussion of selected retail acquisitions, it is clear that a majority of foreign investors took their U.S. businesses seriously and tried to meet the challenges. With few exceptions, they made careful decisions on the choice of acquisition candidates, and were fully committed to mobilizing resources to get the acquired businesses on the right track and expediting growth.

Many newly acquired businesses were not in good shape. Some were experiencing stagnation and needed new directions besides capital and support facilities. The new owners made sure that their U.S. operations did not suffer on any of these accounts. Thus, they provided a new lease on life to many retail operations that probably would have gone into liquidation without the change in ownership.

In six cases, the retail businesses acquired by foreign investors either failed or were sold to third parties within a few years. But, still, the new owners gave it their best shot. In other cases, they struggled hard to restore the operations back to normal but could not network with store personnel, suppliers, and financiers. Most new owners formulated a growth strategy and worked for a planned expansion program in their respective market segments.

On the whole, therefore, the retail firms benefited from foreign acquisitions. Some were salvaged from likely collapse. Others were able to expand into a bigger network of stores. The American units also benefited from innovative thinking and new expertise which came from the exchange of know-how that was a natural aftermath of the transfer of ownership.

For the purpose of gathering additional information, I conducted a survey on the attitude of retailing executives and academic authorities on retailing toward foreign acquisitions. Questionnaires were mailed to about 400 persons, and 84 usable responses were returned.

Nearly a third, or 31 percent, of the respondents agreed, and 46 percent partly agreed, that the trend of foreign investments in retailing was a healthy development and a natural outgrowth of the development of an international economy. A significant majority, 69 percent, disagreed with the view that most foreign owners of American retail companies are passive investors. One-half of the respondents believed that foreign investments will lead to the development of new retailing techniques and an infusion of more capital in the acquired businesses.

With regard to negative impact, the respondents were asked whether the acquisitions affected employee morale, the market for domestic manufacturers, and the level of customer service. Sixty percent of the respondents stated that a frequent change of ownership, domestic or foreign, adversely affected the morale of employees and caused a high turnover of senior executives. As to the effect on domestic industries, 45 percent agreed that foreign acquisitions affected the market for national brands that are supplied by domestic manufacturers. This suggested that there was a fairly widespread belief that foreign owners would turn more toward overseas buying and private branding.

Implications of ownership changes

Another 43 percent indicated that a frequent change of ownership and the dismembering of an organization affected the level of customer service, particularly when the new management moved to close down existing units or sell some of the divisions to third parties. The quality of service also suffered when a change in ownership caused minor or major changes in the assortment carried. Forty-three percent of the respondents believed that foreign acquisitions tended to affect the merchandise mix of retail stores.

The conclusion is, that to date, foreign acquisitions in general have benefitted the American retailing industry at both the micro and macro levels. At the micro level, many targets have gained fresh capital infusions, new managerial approaches, and the organizational structuring needed to implement growth programs. At the macro level, the redirection of lagging companies helped stabilize the industry. ■

The M&A Rosters®

First Quarter 1990

91 Quarterly Highlights
Buyers and sellers completed 861 transactions in the first quarter of 1990.

93 Top 25 Transactions
Time Inc. and Warner Communications wrapped up their controversial combination to lead the first-quarter slate.

95 Quarterly Profile

97 The Rosters

97 U.S. Mergers & Acquisitions
Domestic deals accounted for about three-quarters of overall activity with 660 transactions valued at $43.8 billion.

191 Foreign Investment in the U.S.
Overseas companies racked up 127 acquisitions in the U.S. with combined prices of $11.7 billion.

210 U.S. Investment Abroad
Led by Ford's acquisition of Jaguar, American firms spent $3.8 billion in 74 foreign acquisitions.

THE M&A ROSTERS, reporting the merger, acquisition, and divestiture activity of U.S. firms, are divided into four sections: U.S. Mergers and Acquisitions, Foreign Investment in the U.S., U.S. Investment Abroad, and an update of completed transactions from the prior quarter. Each section is organized alphabetically by acquirer under two-digit SIC-based industry-segment headings. A tab index, visible to the right of this page, directs users to the four major sections of the Rosters and to specific ranges of SIC-based industry segments within the first section (U.S. firms acquiring U.S. firms). Corresponding page tabs can be located by flexing the book to expose page edges. An index of SIC-based industry headings is at the bottom of the tab index page.

These are abbreviations for transaction types:

acq. — acquired
acq. int. — acquired interest in
acq. add int. — acquired additional interest in
acq. rem. int. — acquired remaining interest in
acq. maj. int. — acquired majority interest in
acq. unit — acquired unit/division of

An asterisk (*) following the acquired company's name indicates a divestiture.

The M&A Rosters are extracted quarterly from the M&A Data Base, ADP/MLR, a computer-accessible data bank of m&a activity from 1979 to present. While the Rosters provide basic information on all reported transactions completed during the preceding quarter, additional financial information — such as market price of the acquired company's stock prior to announcement, book value, premium paid, and P/E ratio — can be retrieved quickly from the M&A Data Base. The M&A Data Base also contains current data on pending transactions.

To qualify for inclusion in the M&A Data Base and the M&A Rosters, a transaction must be valued at $1 million or more. Partial acquisitions of 5 percent or more of a company's stock are included if the $1 million threshold is met. Sales of real property are not included. If the price has not been revealed, the transaction is included if it is believed to meet the price threshold.

The quarterly Rosters are published in Mergers & Acquisitions as follows: 1st quarter, July/August; 2nd quarter, September/October; 3rd quarter, January/February; 4th quarter, March/April. The Mergers & Acquisitions Almanac & Index, published each May, provides a cross-index of all acquiring and acquired firms of the preceding year.

Slowdown, No Breakdown

If merger, acquisition, and divestiture activity still hadn't quite adjusted to the evolving conditions governing the marketplace, it hardly fell off the board in the first quarter of 1990. Dealmaking numbers reflected a reasonably good pace of m&a completions if not the often hyperactive clip that characterized the market through mid-1989. Strategic buyers led the parade.

There were 861 completed mergers, acquisitions, and divestitures in the first quarter and their dollar value was $59.2 billion, according to the M&A Data Base, ADP/MLR Publishing. That compared with 846 transactions valued at $66.5 billion in the fourth quarter of 1989, which represented the slowest year-end windup in several years. However, first-quarter activity was down from the same span in 1989 when there were 1,044 deals valued at $56.8 billion.

The entertainment industry was the runaway leader in dollar volume with $12.8 billion. However, all but a fraction of that was attributable to one deal — the delayed completion of the official merger of Time Inc. and Warner Communications Inc. months after Time effectively had bought control. That transaction — the largest completion in the quarter — was valued at $12.6 billion.

Media was in second place with a dealmaking volume of $4.6 billion, and that industrial subset was closely followed by banking at $4.56 billion, and nonbank financial services at $4.2 billion. Topping the media list was the acquisition of control of LIN Broadcasting Corp. by McCaw Cellular Communications Inc. at a cost of nearly $3.4 billion. Primerica Corp.'s purchase of BarclaysAmerican/Financial for $1.35 billion from U.K.-based Barclays Bank paced the nonbank financial section.

Most active in numbers of deals was the business, professional, and social services sector with 79 transactions. However, that was a sector of mostly smallish transactions since the combined dollar value, $2.1 billion, was good enough for only 10th place in dollar volume.

Banking took second place with 67 completions. They included Citicorp's purchase of the Bank of New England's credit card operations for $828 million, First Union Corp.'s acquisition of Florida National Banks of Florida Inc. for $821.1 million, and the CoreStates Financial Corp. absorption of First Pennsylvania Corp. with a $596.3 million price tag.

Other active sectors were wholesale trade with 58 deals, healthcare with 43, and computer and data processing services with 42.

Divestitures continued to account for about a third of all m&a activity. There were 288 sell-offs valued at $19.1 billion, against 275 in the fourth quarter, with combined prices of $14.9 billion in the fourth quarter of 1989.

Nonbank financial services was the divestiture leader in dollar volume at $3.4 billion, which included the Barclays American sell-off. Food and tobacco took second place at $2.4 billion with the majority of the value represented by the RJR Nabisco Inc. sale of Del Monte USA to DMPH Holdings Corp.

The biggest divestiture in the quarter was the sale of the Holiday Inn division of Holiday Corp. to Bass PLC of the U.K. Most of the $1.98 billion value was attributable to assumption of debt.

Foreign acquisitions in the U.S. totaled 127, against 135 in the fourth quarter, and dollar value was $11.7 billion, compared with $13 billion. The Bass acquisition of Holiday Inns represented the biggest foreign investment in terms of value. The highest-priced acquisition of a standalone company was the purchase of Combustion Engineering Inc. by the Swiss-Swedish combine, ABB Asea Brown Boveri, for $1.6 billion.

U.S. acquisitions abroad rose to 74 from 51 in the fourth quarter and dollar value surged to $3.8 billion from $932.1 million. Ford Motor Co.'s $2.6 billion acquisition of Jaguar PLC of the U.K. accounted for the lion's share of the value.

A sector heavily impacted by changes in m&a market conditions, leveraged buyouts managed 57 deals with a value of $7.1 billion. Comparable fourth-quarter numbers were 89 deals valued at $7.5 billion.

The LBO area posted two megadeals — the DMPH buyout of Del Monte USA, and J.H. Whitney & Co.'s $1.35 billion acquisition of Prime Computer Inc. □

Acquisitions have become major vehicles for carrying out the savings and loan rescue program. A plethora of properties for sale is matched by a host of buyers, principally commercial banks eager to strengthen their competitive positions quickly and at attractive prices. The canniest dealmakers see the bailout as just one part of a sweeping consolidation in financial services.

POSTMERGER INTEGRATION

Trimming executive ranks after an acquisition doesn't have to be a no-win situation. The thoughtful acquirer should manage the process with severance packages, counseling, and outplacement help. A well-orchestrated program adds value to the deal.

BANKRUPTCIES

47 Chapter 11 Acquisitions: Payoffs for Patience ■ Mark D. Brodsky and Joel B. Zweibel
American Home's acquisition of A.H. Robins suggests that businesses operating in bankruptcy are drawing increased acquisition interest because the dollar price may be cheap. But the price in time, patience, and frayed nerves can be costly. To get the payoff, a buyer must endure a long, complicated legal process.

As U.S. companies step up cross-border dealmaking, foreign currency fluctuations will figure strongly in their plans. Exchange rate shifts have the potential to sharply boost an agreed purchase price before the deal is closed. However, the international buyer can gain some protection from existing currency risk management skills and techniques.

Thrift Bailout

Sifting the S&L Rubble For Buying Opportunities

Bert Ely

Well-heeled banks are in the best position to capitalize on the savings and loan rescue program through acquisitions. The best deals will be struck by institutions that stick to m&a fundamentals and can strengthen themselves to survive a massive consolidation in the financial services industry.

IS THE BAILOUT of the Federal Savings & Loan Insurance Corp. (FSLIC) a lode of gilded acquisition opportunities or a minefield of potential disasters? Clearly, it is the latter, except for well-capitalized banks and savings and loans that acquire insolvent thrift institutions to increase deposit market share, to gain operating efficiencies, or to move into new markets. Buying right in the market for troubled thrifts also requires a firm knowledge of m&a fundamentals — pricing, valuation, synergies, tax strategies, etc. — and a full recognition of the massive changes sweeping across the financial services industry in the 1990s.

As savvy bankers have been sizing up their opportunities and begun to make deals, the strategically oriented acquisition has become an important aspect of the mega-billion-dollar FSLIC bailout. The spotlight also has shone brightly the efforts by Resolution Trust Corp. (RTC), the federal agency executing the FSLIC bailout, to sell eventually more than 300,000 real estate properties, valued in the range of $100 billion, that are left behind when the deposits and good assets in insolvent s&ls are sold. So large is this sell-off program that it has been described by The Wall Street Journal as "the biggest real estate marketing spree since the Homestead Act of westward-ho days."

Increasing attention is being paid, though, to the hundreds of s&ls being sold by RTC which was created in August 1989 by the bailout's enabling legislation, the Financial Institutions Reform, Recovery, and Enforcement Act of 1989 (FIRREA). The deposit franchise of these thrifts generates valuable acquisition opportunities for the canny banker, if he or she properly understands the dynamics of banking in the 1990s.

In the scouting of thrifts for sale, what looks good to the bank across the street seldom will appeal to an investment group or nonbank acquirer because banks usually can count on synergies and economies of scale that are not available to nonbank organizations. This is why very few insolvent s&ls will be bought by investor groups. The few investor groups that do buy an insolvent s&l most likely will purchase a fairly small one and possibly convert it to a commercial bank.

Commercial banks also are best positioned to execute so-called RTC-unassisted supervisory mergers in which banks can take over mutual thrift institutions literally without paying anything in the form of an acquisition currency. The "price" is absorption of goodwill and, if necessary, the pumping in of additional funds to cure a capital deficiency that the s&l might have suffered. This price makes sense, though, if it is less than the fair market value of the thrift's deposit franchise. The return can be an immediate kick to market share, deposit base, and other measurements of size and economies of scale. Among some notable supervisory mergers were the agreement by Pittsburgh National Bank to merge with $3 billion in assets First Federal of Pittsburgh (See Mergers & Acquisitions "Case Study" March/April 1990) and the tie-up of National City Corp., Cleveland, and the $1.6 billion Gem Savings Association, Dayton.

To buy right in the age of FIRREA, bankers first must grasp the profoundly changing nature of the financial services industry. The "financial services revolution" that was prominently cited about a decade ago has just begun to pick up speed. It is a vast sorting out and consolidation process that will destroy outmoded regulatory barriers. The collapse of the FSLIC and the creation of several new agencies, including the RTC, to oversee the dissolution of the thrift industry is part of this process.

Fast-changing technologies have undermined many existing regulations by allowing thrifts and commercial banks to do business in ways that once simply were not feasible. Banks are becoming more and more specialized, building on their strengths and eliminating their weaknesses as a natural outcome of the new dynamics of electronic and financial technology.

The majority of thrifts will sell at relatively low premiums as a percent of core deposits. As far as price is concerned, it's a buyer's market in a troubled industry.

Amid this change, the U.S. deposit-taking business has become a very mature industry that is in the early stages of contraction and consolidation. Because major regulatory barriers did not begin to erode until recently, the industry has substantial overcapacity — at least 10 percent to 15 percent, based on expense levels. There are too many organizations, too many branches, too many employees, and too many costs.

Building on the rapid change of the last decade, FIRREA has been, and will continue to be, a major impetus in squeezing out this excess "fat," and promoting a marketplace melding of the banking and thrift industries. Despite an often-criticized slow start, RTC has begun stepping up its sell-off pace, with the aim of selling one institution every working day. S&l sales and mergers in the marketplace that exist outside of the government program also will pick up speed. I estimate that of the country's existing 2,700 s&ls, only 1,000 will survive as stand-alone entities five years from now. The rest will have been merged into or will be controlled by banks. Many of the thousand or so survivors will be "small thrifts" lacking the political clout to maintain a separate regulatory structure. The thrift industry, in reality and in regulation, quickly will disappear.

Piecemeal consolidation in commercial banking

A parallel trend will be the consolidation of the commercial banking industry. Although post-FIRREA legislative fatigue and growing concerns about the banking system have postponed repeal of Glass-Steagall banking restrictions for the time being, the courts and banking regulators, in their own complementary ways, are knocking down many of the barriers to banking industry diversification and expansion. So, in a very haphazard and piecemeal manner, the banks slowly are securing broader and broader powers to modernize and to consolidate.

In the 1990s, regional banks in particular will get bigger and more genuinely national in scope as money center banks decline in relative importance. Within states, particularly those west of the Mississippi River, larger banks will continue to expand by buying up smallish local institutions. Meanwhile, there will be increasing penetration of American banking by foreign banks, a few of which will be looking at thrift acquisitions as vehicles for entering, or expanding, into the U.S. market. By the year 2000, because of the U.S. international trade deficit, a substantial portion of the American banking industry may be owned by foreign interests, following the pattern now existing in California.

As a result of this consolidation of the banking and thrift industries, there will be relatively fewer large regional and national players, just as there now are relatively few retailers in a number of categories of retailing.

Like many other sectors of the economy, though, the mega-survivors will coexist with a number of smaller, highly specialized niche players such as banks that serve highly targeted markets and even a few old-time mutual s&ls. The losing institutions will be those in the middle that are too small to reap the economies of scale of the giants and too big to be niche players. In the Washington, D.C., area, for example, I predict that not a single s&l with more than $500 million in assets will survive. The trend will be replicated in other major markets as well. The most likely acquirers — national players like Citicorp or regional forces like First Union, BankOne, or NCNB.

Increasing emphasis in the new financial services era will be on market share, much as that has been a principal strategic target in areas such as food and gasoline retailing. The rule of thumb for gasoline retailers, for example, is that if a major oil company can't get an 8-percent to 10-percent share in a specific market, it should pull out. But unlike retailers of tangibles, deposit-taking institutions can define their markets in several ways — such as the geographical region in which they have a physical presence through bricks and mortar, i.e., branch offices, or by providing specialized products or services to markets not tied to branch locations.

Regardless of how the market is defined, the best financial services performers will be the organizations that can best capture the benefits of rapid technological changes — principally those based on the computer — to implement their strategies. The importance of the computer is based on this fact: Common to all financial services is the legal contract, such as a check, a loan, a stock certificate, a bond, a life insurance policy, a real estate contract, etc. The computer, with its increasing and cheaper power, has allowed the conversion of the legal contract into bits and bytes so that at very little incremental cost, but with substantial up-front investment, data can be captured, analyzed, unbundled, repackaged, massaged, sold, copied, transmitted, or put through any of the myriad steps common to all financial services activities. This combination of consolidation and technological advance should strongly influence thrift buyers.

In addition to the economic and technological change facing thrifts and their buyers, FIRREA itself has been a major, and not totally consistent, contributor to industrywide change. Not only did the law produce a number of new requirements and business ground rules for s&ls, but even these revisions have been subject to modification by regulators trying to implement FIRREA's basic provisions.

Second-class citizens

FIRREA effectively made s&ls second-class citizens in the banking world, posing a challenge that bank acquirers already are learning to get around. Under FIRREA, bank holding companies can buy an s&l and integrate its operations, subject to state branching laws and some special restrictions that last up to two years. For the first year after FIRREA, banks cannot convert an s&l to a bank charter if the thrift's tangible capital is more than 4 percent of its assets. For the second year, banks cannot convert the s&l into a bank if the s&l has capital of more than 5 percent. After two years, the wraps are off.

Banks can bypass that restriction by simply utilizing a holding company to buy the s&l and keep it in that mode for at least two years. Meanwhile, banks are using provisions of FIRREA to integrate the thrift's operations with those of the bank. For example, XYZ Bank can buy a neighboring s&l, change the s&l's name to XYZ Bank, and offer a unified product line while legally keeping the acquired institution under an s&l charter.

In fact, there may be potential advantages to keeping the thrift under an s&l charter. The acquirer can avoid paying exit and entrance fees to the federal deposit insurance funds for banks and s&ls.

Capital requirements for thrifts also are tougher under FIRREA. S&ls eventually must hold at least 3-percent capital in relation to assets and also meet the same risk-based capital standards being phased in for banks. As thrifts shed assets to improve their capital-to-asset ratios, they also can reduce deposits and other liabilities. FSLIC loans and investments in s&ls cannot be counted as core capital. That includes government-held warrants, preferred stock, and subordinated debt. The new requirements also don't allow goodwill to be included in a thrift's capital.

Privatization of insurance

Congress properly reasoned that thrift stockholders must invest more of their own capital as a cushion for the federal insurance fund. I believe this is the wave of the future as the deposit-taking and insurance industries converge, and as the depositor protection process eventually is privatized.

Deposit insurance premiums paid by thrift institutions will rise under FIRREA, which uses these premiums as one of the funding sources for cleaning up the FSLIC mess. Under the law, s&ls are required to remain in the relatively costly Savings Association Insurance Fund (SAIF) for five years and must pay an exit fee to leave the fund after the five-year wait. Earnings of the Federal Home Loan Banks are another source of funds. However, the biggest contribution by far will come from the taxpayer.

Junk bonds are off-limits for thrifts under FIRREA. In a well-known provision that caused a few s&ls to stock up on high-yield bonds, ironically just before the junk bond market collapsed, FIRREA bans future purchases of junk securities and gives institutions up to five years to sell off existing portfolios.

Penalties for wrongdoing that damages a thrift or a bank now hit not only directors, officers, and other key insiders, but have been extended to attorneys, appraisers, and accountants involved in actions that lead to an institution's demise. The major restrictions and incentives for a bank acquiring an s&l generally apply to all types of s&ls — whether state or federally chartered, or structured as mutual or stock institutions.

When evaluating merger candidates, however, a bank should keep in mind that mutual s&ls can be a better buy and that there are more of them. The majority of the country's thrifts are mutuals and most of them are small. While stock s&ls hold the majority of thrift assets, about 60 percent of the total, they are fewer in number. Most of the big s&ls are stock institutions and about 600 of them are owned by holding companies, including some that are diversified.

Gaining control of a stockholder-owned thrift is not dissimilar to buying any other corporation. Tender offers can be made to stockholders, although the actual takeover must be approved by the regulators. A hostile or unsolicited bid also can be waged through a proxy fight.

Mutuals often are self-perpetuating oligarchies. Theoretically, they are owned by their depositors but run by boards of directors that elect themselves and the officers. Many of the key executives are second- and third-generation members of the same family that has run the s&l for decades. Thus, to acquire a mutual, the buyer must strike a deal with management. If the s&l is strong, some money or stock of the acquiring bank may have to go to the depositors, but the decisionmakers are the top managers. Their key incentives are good management contracts. The buyer must be careful, though, to not be too generous in hammering out these contracts or they will not pass regulatory muster.

To downsize into niches, many thrifts will be both buying and selling. In a close parallel to food retailing, s&ls and other deposit-taking institutions will be acquiring in markets where they are dominant and selling peripheral operations.

Although they will try to hold off as long as possible, many mutuals, like many stock s&ls, ultimately must sell out for the same reasons that drive stock institutions to seek buyers — lack of successor management, inability to survive in the changing marketplace, and inadequate capital. That situation offers great opportunities for acquiring banks since these mutuals often represent attractive additions to market share. To downsize into niches, many thrifts will be both buying and selling. In a close parallel to food retailing, s&ls and other deposit-taking institutions will be acquiring in markets where they are dominant or close to being dominant. At the same time, they will be selling off peripheral operations, such as isolated branches and sets of branches, whose share of market — measured either by geography or product/service category — is small.

The computer-driven reduction of the fundamental cost of doing business affords banks and thrifts tremendous opportunities to specialize, especially in any area that demands substantial transactions processing. There is a lot of back-office processing in financial services, and many s&ls are selling or contracting out their support services. Examples include mortgage servicing, securities transfers, and credit card and check processing.

Beyond transactions processing, the lending area affords ample opportunities for specialization. But a niche has to be chosen carefully because it can disappear quickly. Lending for boat buying once was considered a comfortable niche for those institutions willing to be in it, but that niche disappeared when more institutions plunged into it and squeezed down lending margins. This destruction of profitable lending niches happens with some regularity.

The cyclical home mortgage lending area is not considered an especially profitable activity except for the very efficient or the very specialized. Over time, mortgage origination may become closely hitched to home sales and home building organizations, just as auto dealers have become major originators of car loans.

A competitive squeeze

The economics of mortgage origination are changing rapidly — in part because of the increasing standardization of the mortgage product itself and in part because such innovations as the cellular telephone and the FAX machine put mortgage-granting organizations headquartered in other parts of the country in competition with local banks and thrifts. Some mortgage originators laid off over the past three years by thrifts and mortgage banking firms also have become competitors as self-employed mortgage originators working out of their cars and their homes. Their low overhead enables these entrepreneurs to compete very effectively against bank and thrift mortgage originators with large overheads. Since mortgage origination has become an easy market to enter, it will suffer over the years more often from overcapacity than undercapacity.

Two interesting niches, both involving so-called forgotten sectors, may develop down the road. One is serving the inner cities where many bankers have been reluctant to lend. Despite the Community Reinvestment Act, some lenders avoid central city lending because of a fear of poor credit risks and higher operating expenses. But more may come to see the central cities as a challenge to develop products and services that will allow them to operate profitably.

A second emerging niche is rural and small-town America — or population centers below 25,000. While rural America is largely served by small, independent banks and government-sponsored lenders, successes of retailers like Wal-Mart Stores Inc. and Heilig-Meyers Co. in serving these regions suggest that someday a major banking organization may emerge to focus largely on serving rural America.

One of the most important points bankers must remember in acquiring s&ls is that they must bring more than money to the table. They also must be able to squeeze operating expenses out of an acquired thrift in order to make the combined institution more efficient. However, the true value of an s&l lies in its retail franchise and its corps of depositors.

At a fall 1989 conference hosted by the investment banking firm of Smith Barney, Harris Upham & Co., several CEOs of thrift institutions repeated the theme that "your liabilities are your assets, and your assets are liabilities." This was a thrift executive's way of saying that in the real world, deposits are more akin to assets and that an s&l's franchise value — and therefore its goodwill — is centered in an s&l's deposit funding base and in how efficiently it can raise its funds. It is important to remember in this context that the asset side of an s&l is primarily a commodity business with commodity pricing.

The data used to estimate that value can be derived in part from the call reports, or financial statements, that s&ls must file with regulatory agencies. By using call reports, prospective acquirers can size up important elements regarding an s&l's deposit base:

- Average account size. (A high average signals excessive dependence on rate-sensitive or "hot" deposits).
- The proportion of deposits in accounts that are service-sensitive, i.e., in accounts that have checkable features (The more the better, because service-sensitive accounts offer more opportunities for selling higher valued-added and profitable services to depositors).
- The proportion of deposits smaller than $80,000. (The higher the better.)
- Account balances not in certificates of deposit. (The fewer CD-based deposits the better.)
- Average life of CDs.
- Brokered deposits, or large accounts obtained through financial intermediaries. (The fewer the better.)

On the expense side, the acquirer should look at cost information such as:

- Average cost of deposits. (The lower the better.)
- Operating costs. (Expenses for such items as computers, personnel, and branches, but excluding interest expense and loan loss provisions.)
- Service charges. (This is a barometer of how good the institution is at pricing and charging fees for identifiable services.)
- The "all-in" cost of funds, which is the combined cost of interest on deposits and operating costs, net of service charges.

The wise banker then should seek out the efficient funders — those that have built solid franchise value in their deposit base.

Development of a buyer's market

Fortunately for acquirers, the majority of thrifts today will sell at relatively low premiums as a percent of their core deposits. As far as price is concerned, it's a buyer's market in a troubled industry.

The onrushing demise of the nation's thrift industry poses both distinct opportunities and risks for potential s&l acquirers. Fundamental economic and technological changes in the banking business, combined with the slow start of the RTC during the first year of implementing FIRREA, dictate caution for banks considering s&l acquisitions. ■

The Log on the S&L Cleanup Program

As of early July 1990, Resolution Trust Corp. had seized 460 insolvent and troubled savings and loans. RTC said it had "resolved" the situation in the case of 209 thrifts with $66.9 billion in deposits.

The resolution included 98 outright sales of troubled institutions. Among the other forms of resolution are cash payoffs to depositors, closure, and partial asset sales. □

Historical Review

A 25-Year Profile Of Mergers and Acquisitions

In the context of mergers and acquisitions, the last 25 years stretched from the early days of the conglomerate era through the restructuring wave of the 1980s to the present period of focused, systemized acquisition programs. The postscripts to the major deals of 1965 reflect these transitions. In only nine cases have all or most of the target's operations been retained by acquirers that remain free-standing companies. Most of the 1965 deals resulted in divestiture or spin-off, frequently by conglomerates that executed rationalization programs. Nine of the top-deal buyers of 1965 have themselves been merged or acquired — including two that went private in LBOs.

The following list is an updated version of the roll originally published in the September/October 1985 edition of Mergers & Acquisitions. The list was compiled by M&A after extensive research of data from numerous sources, including the New York Stock Exchange, Federal Trade Commission, and several publications and information organizations. It is believed to substantially represent the largest deals of 1965. However, some eligible transactions may have been omitted because m&a statistics were not uniformly or systematically compiled in the mid-1960s.

*Merger and acquisition statistics were less systematically kept in the mid-1960s. The data for 1965 and 1966 are Federal Trade Commission statistics for merger announcements (some of which were not completed) in mining and manufacturing. Mergers & Acquisitions began recording completed transactions in 1967, and the M&A Data Base, ADP/MLR Publishing, which came on stream in 1984, contains completed deals from 1979 on. The data for 1967 to 1989 are M&A's figures for dealmaking activity.

The M&A Rosters®

Second Quarter 1990

91 Roster Highlights
There were 851 m&a completions in the second quarter of 1990.

93 Top 25 Transactions
Georgia-Pacific completed its once-contentious acquisition of Great Northern Nekoosa, in the second quarter's largest deal.

95 Quarterly Profile

97 The Rosters

97 U.S. Mergers & Acquisitions
Domestic dealmaking fell sharply to 678 transactions valued at $17.5 billion.

194 Foreign Investment in the U.S.
Overseas buyers accounted for 112 completions with a value of $8.9 billion.

211 U.S. Investment Abroad
American firms paid only $661.6 million for 61 foreign acquisitions.

223 Update

THE M&A ROSTERS, reporting the merger, acquisition, and divestiture activity of U.S. firms, are divided into four sections: U.S. Mergers and Acquisitions, Foreign Investment in the U.S., U.S. Investment Abroad, and an update of completed transactions from the prior quarter. Each section is organized alphabetically by acquirer under two-digit SIC-based industry-segment headings. A tab index, visible to the right of this page, directs users to the four major sections of the Rosters and to specific ranges of SIC-based industry segments within the first section (U.S. firms acquiring U.S. firms). Corresponding page tabs can be located by flexing the book to expose page edges. An index of SIC-based industry headings is at the bottom of the tab index page.

These are abbreviations for transaction types:

acq. — acquired
acq. int. — acquired interest in
acq. add int. — acquired additional interest in
acq. rem. int. — acquired remaining interest in
acq. maj. int. — acquired majority interest in
acq. unit — acquired unit/division of

An asterisk (*) following the acquired company's name indicates a divestiture.

The M&A Rosters are extracted quarterly from the M&A Data Base, ADP/MLR, a computer-accessible data bank of m&a activity from 1979 to present. While the Rosters provide basic information on all reported transactions completed the preceding quarter, additional financial information — such as market price of the acquired company's stock prior to announcement, book value, premium paid, and P/E ratio — can be retrieved quickly from the M&A Data Base. The M&A Data Base also contains current data on pending transactions.

To qualify for inclusion in the M&A Data Base and the M&A Rosters, a transaction must be valued at $1 million or more. Partial acquisitions of 5 percent or more of a company's stock are included if the $1 million threshold is met. Sales of real property are not included. If the price has not been revealed, the transaction is included if it is believed to meet the price threshold.

The quarterly Rosters are published in Mergers & Acquisitions as follows: 1st quarter, July/August; 2nd quarter, September/October; 3rd quarter, January/February; 4th quarter, March/April. The Mergers & Acquisitions Almanac & Index, published each May, provides a cross-index of all acquiring and acquired firms of the preceding year.

ROSTER HIGHLIGHTS

Five-Year Low in Deal Prices

The second quarter of 1990 eventually may wind up as a historic transition point between the mergers and acquisitions wave of the 1980s and the character of m&a activity in the years ahead. Dealmaking activity itself held up fairly well with 851 merger, acquisition, and divestiture completions. But, at $27 billion, dollar value sagged to the lowest quarterly level since the second quarter of 1985 when dollar volume totaled only $24.9 billion.

As a result, second-quarter activity may have been the first sign of a new dealmaking pattern that is developing in response to the many changes that have impacted the m&a market since mid-1989. That includes a reasonably good volume of smaller, strategically oriented deals with fewer megadeals, leveraged transactions, and hostile bids. Whether that trend actually jells depends on the outcome of many still-evolving developments, such as lender conservatism on m&a financing, the future of the junk bond market, and the ultimate direction of the American and worldwide economies. Nonetheless, the second-quarter data indicate that the long-time backbone of the m&a market — the relatively modest-sized corporate acquisition — remains rather strong.

The number of second-quarter deals dropped from 947 in the first quarter of 1990 and 901 in the fourth quarter of 1989 and dollar volume plunged from $60 billion in the opening quarter of this year and $68.5 billion in the wind-up period of 1989.

There also were 1,178 announced deals in the second quarter with a projected value of $44.3 billion. That was a harbinger of a reasonably good deal flow in the second half of 1990.

The industry leader in dollar value was paper and packaging with $3.96 billion, which just nosed out the $3.93 billion volume logged by healthcare. All but a small portion of the paper industry dealmaking value was centered in the largest completion of the quarter — the $3.8 billion acquisition of Great Northern Nekoosa Corp. by Georgia-Pacific Corp. In healthcare, more than half the total value was concentrated in the largest LBO of the quarter which was the acquisition of American Medical International Inc. by IMA Holdings Corp. for nearly $2.1 billion.

A major sign of the trend toward a pattern of a lot of smaller deals was that the most active industries were also-rans as far as dollar value is concerned. Banking, the frequent leader in number of completions, led the way again with 118 deals, but it did not even make the top 10 in dollar value. The runner-up, business, professional and social services, with 67 transactions, was fourth in dollar value at nearly $1.6 billion. The purely domestic m&a market executed 678 completions in the second quarter valued at $17.5 billion, down from first-quarter levels of 727 deals valued at $43.8 billion.

Foreign buyers completed 112 transactions valued at $8.9 billion in the second quarter against 141 acquisitions with a combined price tag of $12 billion in the opening leg of 1990.

The largest foreign acquisition was the purchase of Uniroyal Goodrich Tire Co. by Michelin of France in a deal valued at $1.5 billion including assumption of debt. Runner-up was the $1.25 billion purchase of American Home Products Corp.'s Boyle-Midway household products unit by Reckitt & Colman PLC of the U.K. — which also was the biggest divestiture of the second quarter. Foreign buyers accounted for 10 of the 25 largest acquisitions in the second quarter.

U.S. buyers completed 61 deals abroad with a smallish value of $661.6 million, down substantially from the first-quarter log of 79 deals and a value of $4.3 billion.

Sell-offs hold a majority

Divestiture activity was strong, accounting for 300 of the second-quarter deals, but most sell-offs were of modest size since the total value came to only $10.6 billion. By contrast, the 307 first-quarter sell-offs generated proceeds of $18.8 billion. Thirteen of the second quarter's 25 largest m&a transactions were sell-offs.

A downward trend in big LBOs also was noticeable. The number of deals slipped only a bit to 65 in the second quarter from 69 the period before, but dollar value slumped to $3.6 billion from $7.1 billion. Thus, the IMA acquisition of American Medical accounted for close to three-fifths of the total value in the leveraged buyout category. Four of the top 25 deals were LBOs. □

CS First Boston Inc. — acq. int. — Sealy Corp.
Switzerland — Cleveland, OH
Revenues: $702,000,000
Net Loss: $25,000,000
Year End: 11-30-89

Terms: First Boston Corp., a unit of CS First Boston, acquired a 40-percent equity stake in Sealy, formerly Ohio Mattress Co., from Gibbons, Green, van Amerongen Ltd. The sale of the stake was to restructure Sealy's ill-fated $457 million bridge loan. First Boston plans to use the equity in an eventual attempt to resell the debt to investors in the market for high-risk, high-yield bonds. The stake was purchased from Gibbons, Green and other investors in exchange for converting the bridge loan for permanent financing at rates lower than those of up to 20 percent that it could have imposed unilaterally under the terms of the bridge. This reduces the stake of Gibbons, Green to 50 percent from 90 percent on a fully diluted basis.
Principals: CS First Boston is 44.5-percent owned by CS Holdings, an associate of Credit Suisse, the third-largest bank in Switzerland; 25-percent owned by employees; and 30.5-percent owned by SSO Ltd., a temporary investor. SSO is a British Virgin Island company that is owned by Sullivan S. Olayan, a Saudi Arabian financier.
